

Why do we need to do that? We don't need to. It is only an effort to slow things down. We are not going to agree to that. It is not necessary.

Let's get these things done. We will move to something as quickly as we get rid of this, and they can move the nongermane, nonrelevant amendments on those, but let's get this done. I don't know when we can do this legislation for the first-time home buyers. It has been a tremendous boon to real estate all over America today. Has it been a perfect program? Of course not. But the good part of the amendments—two amendments we are talking about—is they are fully paid for. It doesn't run up the national debt by 10 cents—by nothing. Let's get this done and then move on and start arguing about other things. There is nothing to argue about here. We are not going to go to those amendments.

I had a caucus yesterday in which the Presiding Officer and a number of other Senators throughout the Chamber were there. We have done this time after time, and quite frankly we are tired of it. It is not necessary. There is no reason to have these amendments that are just rifleshoots at trying to embarrass people, and these two amendments don't embarrass anyone. They are good for the country. I hope we can get them done.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

GETTING OUR WORK DONE

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, my good friend the majority leader used to say frequently when he was in the minority that the price of being in the majority in the Senate is you have to take votes in order to advance bills in a smooth process.

My understanding is that we were within one amendment of reaching an agreement several days ago. I think we are not that far away from an agreement that would allow us to expedite consideration of the bill, move it along, and be fair to the minority. I think everyone knows it is not uncommon in the Senate—in fact, it is routine—for there to be amendments offered by both sides that are not directly related to the bill. So there is nothing extraordinary about this.

Let me repeat, we would be more than happy to enter into a short time agreement on the amendments we were discussing with the majority and try to wrap up this bill at the earliest possible time, certainly earlier than we would wrap it up if we let all of this time run until after midnight tonight.

HEALTH CARE WEEK XV, DAY III

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, after months of hearing that Americans don't want government-run health care, Democratic leaders in Washington have made their decision: They are going to include it in their health care bill whether Americans want it or not.

Supporters of the government-run plan say they are only advocating one more option among many. What they don't say is that the option they are advocating would soon be the only option. The others would simply fade away.

It is not that hard to understand. Private health plans would fade away because a government-run plan would use the deep pockets of the Federal Government to set artificially low prices or absorb a loss, making it impossible for private plans to compete. Private plans would either become so expensive that only the very wealthy could afford them or they would go out of business altogether.

If you want to know what happens after that, just ask somebody who lives in a country that has already gone down the road of government-run health care for all. What we have seen in those countries is what we would see here: rationing, denials, and delay. In the United Kingdom, for example, a government board sets guidelines on who gets to use certain drugs and treatments. This means that even if a treatment is effective, it can be withheld from patients because of the amount of money it costs the government. This is what happens when government gets involved in the health care business.

A government plan won't come cheap either. We don't know all the details that Democratic leaders put into their bill behind closed doors, but we do know it will cost over $1 trillion in the middle of a terrible recession. It will cost $1 trillion at a time of near 10 percent unemployment; $1 trillion just a few weeks after the Treasury Department said the administration ran up the largest annual deficit in U.S. history; $1 trillion at a moment when the U.S. Government is financing 9 out of 10 new mortgages and already owns most major U.S. automakers, along with large parts of the finance and insurance industries. It will cost $1 trillion at a time when government spending accounts for a bigger share of the national economy than at any time since the Second World War. It will cost $1 trillion when Congress is about to make a public admission that it can't handle its own finances by raising the debt ceiling.

Now is not the time for a $1 trillion experiment in government health care. Now is the time to buckle down financially and to find commonsense reforms in the area of health care that actually save people money by driving down costs.

Americans asked for lower costs, and they didn't get it. What they got instead was more government, more spending, more debt. This is why so many Americans feel as though they have been taken for a ride in this debate, and it is also why a lot of our friends on the other side are concerned about the bill that is headed to the Senate floor. Americans have issued their verdict. They have been clear. They have said that enough is enough—no government plan, no more debt, no more government takeovers.

Democratic leaders may continue to insist on a bill that most Americans oppose, but it is the wrong approach. A government-owned, government-operated insurance plan was a bad idea before, and it is a bad idea now.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period of morning business for 2 hours, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees, with the majority controlling the first half and the Republicans controlling the second half.

The Senator from Alaska is recognized.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, for the next hour, I will be joined on this floor by my freshman colleagues as we talk with the American people about the importance of health reform. We are committed to ending the status quo. We have had enough of constituents being denied coverage because of existing conditions. We are tired of skyrocketing health insurance premiums hurting small business. We have had it up to here with the lack of choices and affordability in our States. So today my colleagues and I will be talking about why health reform will work and how it is working already.

There are many pilot programs, State initiatives, and private programs showing results right now. There are other very good ideas pending in the health reform bills. Our general theme this morning is innovation that works.

First, we will hear from the Senator from New Mexico, TOM UDALL, who will discuss how we must address the very real health care challenges facing rural Americans. Senator UDALL will share with us rural health innovation that works.

I yield time to Senator UDALL.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. President, I seek recognition.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. President, let me thank the Senator
